ISO 14001: 2015

ENVIRONMENTAL MANAGEMENT SYSTEM

ISO 14001 provides a clear management framework to reduce your environmental impacts and to ensure you meet legal and market requirements.

ISO 14001 is the most recognized international standard for environmental management systems.

It provides a framework for organizations looking to identify and control their environmental impact. Customer awareness to environment has grown more than ever before, leading to greater pressure on organizations to prove their efforts in producing goods and services with the least impact to the environment.

ISO 14001 provides a clear management framework to reduce your environmental impacts and to ensure you meet legal and market requirements. The standard provides your organisation with a systematic approach to planning, implementing and managing an environmental management system.

What is ISO 14001?

ISO 14001 is the most recognized international standard for environmental management systems. Like most ISO standards, ISO 14001 is applicable to any size organisation regardless of its activities, location and sector. ISO 14001 provides a globally tried and accepted framework that ensures legal compliance and at the same time the reduction of unwanted negative environmental impact. It does this through:

- Identify and understand the external and internal influencing factors affecting your organisation and the needs and expectations of interested parties.
- Identify and understand the environmental aspects of activities, products and services and associated environmental impacts considering a life cycle perspective.
- Understand how significant aspects and other risks and opportunities can be managed, implement necessary controls and set clear objectives to improve environmental performance

- Manage your obligation to comply with applicable legal and requirements and other stakeholder obligations, and to regularly check the compliance status.
- Establish the environmental policy and objectives in line with your strategic direction.
- Continually improve the management system to enhance your environmental performance.

ISO 14001:2015 follows the high level structure of other recently revised standards such as the ISO 9001:2015 and ISO 45001 which replaced OHSAS 18001 making it even easier to integrate between these standards.

How will it help my business?

There are many benefits that an organization can experience through implementing and maintaining an environmental management system, but some of the most significant and tangible ones are that the standard enables your organization to::

- Build and operate an environmental management system within a well-defined and clear framework, which at the same time is flexible to your own business needs and expectations.
- Ensure that environmental management is integrated and aligned with the business strategies of your organization.
- Provide a tool for environmental performance improvement and the means to effectively monitor and measure environmental performance..

- Facilitate reductions in pollution, waste generation and unintended discharges to the environment.
- Improve your resource management, including use of energy, which may also reduce the cost of running your business.
- Better meet environmental legal compliance and corporate requirements.
